EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Among many changes to State of Florida personnel practices, Governor Bush's Service First initiative that was passed into law by the Florida Legislature during the 2001 regular legislative session (Senate Bill 466) established parameters for totally restructuring the state's job classification and pay system. This legislation limits the number of occupational groups in Florida's personnel system to no more than 50, and provides for a maximum of six classification levels for each occupation within an occupational group, thus essentially establishing a limit of 300 job classification levels for the State Personnel System. The law also states that the accompanying pay plan shall provide broad-based salary ranges for each occupational group.

The reason these changes were enacted into law is simple: Those familiar with the existing cumbersome job classification procedures are aware of the system's inability to support the necessary level of management flexibility. For supervisors, narrow job classification definitions lead to difficulties in assigning responsibilities that are new or different yet still within the general scope of work expectations. For employees, lack of career progression is the unfortunate outgrowth of the narrow job classifications, which often leads productive workers to change positions and/or agencies to seek recognition and rewards for superior performance elsewhere.

To implement the Service First mandates outlined above, this report recommends adoption of a broadbanding personnel classification and pay system for the State of Florida. The proposed classification system would decrease overall administrative workload by reducing the need to reclassify jobs due to new work assignments or organizational changes. The proposed pay system would allow managers to move employees through expanded pay ranges and provide salary increases or lump-sum bonuses, again without the need for frequent job reclassifications. The new pay system would no longer be based upon numerous, narrow pay grades, but rather broad pay ranges or broad bands. Broadbanding is representative of cutting-edge practice in human resources management, and offers a logical path to modernizing Florida's antiquated personnel system.

The proposed broadband system would be used by all executive branch state agencies, and shall encompass the Career Service, Selected Exempt Service, and Senior Management Service classes, which together total more than 120,000 positions. Personnel not included in broadbanding by the legislation or in this proposal are employees of the legislative and judicial branches, elected officials, Lottery employees, and those in other miscellaneous pay plans (see Appendix A).

In creating the proposed broadbanding system, meeting the requirements of Service First formed the basis of the research and design methodology. The Federal Standard Occupational Classification (SOC) system was chosen as the structural foundation for the new system, and performance factors were developed in order to determine placement of the existing 3,343 job classes into the broadband levels. The research and design work done on the proposed structure for the new classification and pay program resulted in the following:

- Consolidation of the 3,343 classes into 38 occupation groups with 3 to 6 levels in each resulting in 145 broadband classification levels.
- Reduction in the number of pay grades from the current 475. In one approach, a cost-neutral pay band was assigned to each of the 145 levels. In another, a set of 25 pay bands with standardized intervals and widths was developed and applied to the broadband classification levels based on best fit to current salary data.

As required by Senate Bill 466, the proposed system is in anticipation of existing statutory language on classification and pay expiring on June 30, 2002.

INTRODUCTION

Purpose of Report

Among many changes to State of Florida personnel practices, Governor Bush's Service First initiative, passed into law by the Florida Legislature during the 2001 regular legislative session (Senate Bill 466), directed the Department of Management Services (DMS) to revise the current state employee job classification and compensation system. Specifically, the legislation stated that DMS, in consultation with the Executive Office of the Governor and the Legislature, was to develop a new classification and pay program. This new program is to be utilized by all state agencies and employees of the State Personnel System, which encompasses the Career Service, Selected Exempt Service, and Senior Management Service employee classes. DMS was directed to submit a report on the proposed design of this classification and pay program to the Executive Office of the Governor, the presiding officers of the Legislature, and the appropriate legislative fiscal and substantive standing committees on or before December 1, 2001.

Specific requirements of Senate Bill 466 include the following:

- Development of a position classification system using no more than 50 occupational groups and a maximum of six classification levels for the jobs contained in each occupational group, thus essentially establishing a limit of 300 job classes for the State Personnel System. Only the Executive Office of the Governor may establish additional occupational groups after consultation with the Legislature.
- Development of a pay plan that shall provide broad-based salary ranges for each occupational group.
- Sunset of relevant current statutory language on classification and pay effective June 30, 2002.

In fulfillment of these Service First legislative mandates, this report presents information on the State of Florida's existing personnel classification and pay system, points out the weaknesses of this system, discusses the activities undertaken in researching alternatives to the current system, and provides details for a proposed new classification and pay system based on the principles of broadbanding – an approach to personnel system management that emphasizes occupational groups and pay ranges that are fewer in number but larger in overall breadth.

Why Broadbanding?

The Service First legislation contained the following goals that were to be addressed in reforming the state's current classification and pay system:

- The classification system must significantly reduce the need to reclassify positions due to work assignment and organizational changes by decreasing the number of classification changes required.
- The classification system must establish broad-based classes allowing flexibility in organizational structure and must reduce the levels of supervisory classes.
- The classification system and pay plan must emphasize pay administration and job-performance evaluation by management rather than use of the classification system to award salary increases.

- The pay administration system must contain provisions to allow managers the flexibility to move employees through the pay ranges and provide for salary increase additives and lump-sum bonuses.

As to why a new system is needed in the first place, simply put the current State Personnel System has become inconsistent, antiquated and ineffective. At present, the existing system contains 3,343 job classifications and 475 pay grades in separate pay plans, with each pay plan having its own set of governing rules. The narrow job duty definitions and salary ranges embodied in the existing classification and pay system have contributed to inflexible and ineffective personnel administration. Job classification actions, rather than being based on actual agency needs or actual work performed, have instead become a back-door method of providing good employees with raises for retention purposes. In those cases where reclassification is not an available option, valuable workers are frequently lost when they “class-hop” to another job, often to a different agency.

In addition to these fundamental difficulties, management flexibility has been hindered by the current system -- because many job classifications are so specifically written that new responsibilities cannot always be given to those employees best suited to accomplish the work. This unfortunate situation exists also to the detriment of employees who could otherwise improve their skills and knowledge base. Over time, this undermines overall employee development and runs counter to the enhancement of agency performance and achievement.

Finally, the present classification and pay system conflicts with the state’s ongoing efforts to better manage information needs and streamline administration. Florida’s highly vertical traditional personnel system, with its multitude of job classification and pay grades, is outdated when compared to state government structures that are becoming flatter and more team-oriented. Our current system, developed in the mid-1960s with few revisions, is geared toward rewarding employee longevity rather than performance. Today, state agencies are expanding horizontally and require a personnel system that rewards workers for lateral job growth and their contributions to the agency mission. It is the limitations of the existing system and the possibilities for improvement that prompted the inclusion of broadbanding language in the Service First legislation.

In brief, a broadbanding-based system collapses many narrow classifications and pay grades into a relative few broad classifications and wide pay “bands” that form the foundation for managing personnel and administering pay. Broadbanding supports the transition to flatter organization structures and utilization of a higher-talent workforce. Instead of emphasizing titles, pay grades, and job descriptions, the focus of broadbanding is to utilize a system that provides incentives for employees to increase their job-related value by developing new skills and contributing to improve agency service. Broadbanding encourages workers to acquire additional knowledge so they may adapt to new roles and make lateral moves in response to organizational needs, through the creation of a supportive environment for employee cross-functionality, team development, and the ability to receive rewards within a broader pay range. The result of implementing a broadbanding classification and pay system can be that personnel administration is simplified, agencies are more responsive to their customers, and employee careers are more satisfying.

To summarize, Florida’s adoption of a broadbanding classification and pay system will be an important component of how the state deals with the challenges of increased demand for government services with ongoing technological advancements, and the need to continually improve organizational effectiveness to better serve its citizens. The State of Florida will benefit from the support of a human resource system that promotes job flexibility, allows agencies to make the most of their available employees’ skill sets, and affords the opportunity and structure to reward employees by encouraging development and performance.

CURRENT CLASSIFICATION SYSTEM

The State Personnel System is comprised of about 120,000 positions within the Career Service, Selected Exempt Service, and Senior Management Service. Each service has a separate job classification plan. These plans group employees into job classifications based upon similar kinds of work, levels of job difficulty or responsibility, and qualification requirements that warrant similar treatment.

The Career Service Classification Plan is the largest of the three pay plans, encompassing over 90,000 positions assigned to 984 “classes” based on job similarities. A class specification identifies the following information for each classification, or similar employee group:

1. Class code – number assigned to a class of positions
2. Class title – official name assigned to a class of positions
3. Allocation factors – statement of duties/responsibilities that indicate type and level of work
4. Examples of work
5. Knowledge, skills, and abilities (KSAs) – minimum proficiencies, aptitudes, and knowledge to perform tasks
6. Minimum qualifications – lowest level of qualifications to be eligible for position consideration, including experience, training, education, and certification. (Selected Exempt Service classes that require licensure or certification per the Florida Statutes also have class specifications that stipulate the legal requirements)
7. Establish date and revision date(s)

In addition to the above, an annual pay plan is published that contains the following information about each classification:

1. Pay grade and range
2. Fair Labor Standards Act code – this is a designation of included or excluded for overtime purposes
3. Retirement category
4. Equal Employment Opportunity code
5. Collective bargaining unit designation
6. Probationary period

The Selected Exempt Service Classification Plan covers about 21,000 positions and 1,890 classifications, while the Senior Management Service Classification Plan covers 530 positions and is comprised of 424 classes. Compared to those within the Career Service Classification Plan, each position in these two systems is more likely to have its own class. For example, each state agency has a Selected Exempt Service class specifically for its General Counsel, e.g., General Counsel for the Department of Transportation and General Counsel for the Department of Corrections. If the General Counsel position were in the Career Service, only one class would exist for all General Counsels.

Senior Management and Selected Exempt Service classes are assigned the indicators below:

1. Class code
2. Class title
3. Pay grade
4. FLSA code
5. Retirement category
6. Collective bargaining unit
7. Minimum Qualifications if required by statute.

Problems with Current Classification System

In addition to the shortcomings discussed earlier, the following are some basic problems that can be identified with the current classification system:

- The existing system is antiquated, built for the needs of the workforce almost 40 years ago.
- The system allows for redundancies in class use between pay plans. For example, the title of Inspector General appears in the Career Service, the Selected Exempt Service, and the Senior Management Service.
- As an outgrowth of narrow job classes, the system contains outdated classifications. For example, the Clerk Typist class is still used in the system even though computers have long replaced typewriters and the original purpose of this class no longer exists.
- The system lacks an adequate amount of paraprofessional classifications. This results in misusing classes such as Senior Clerk and Administrative Assistant in place of position classifications that would serve as an appropriate starting point for professionally based career paths.
- Existing minimum qualifications on the class specifications do not support position duties because classes are no longer used as designed. Originally, classes were needed to assign types of work, and were therefore assigned qualifications. Today, classes are used for their pay range.
- The system contains numerous inconsistencies in overall position classification depth and breadth. For example, the system has classes as specific as Accountant II, which is very narrowly defined and leaves no flexibility for management to utilize the position for other related agency needs. On the other hand, classes such as Operations and Management Consultant and Senior Management Analyst are so broadly defined that the actual type of work performed by employees in these positions varies widely across agencies.
- The number of classifications used in the State Personnel System has grown to over 3,000 titles. This is a result of the delegated authority to agencies and a common philosophy that unique agency missions required developing specialized job classifications. For instance, several classes have been developed to perform financial auditing duties based on agency specific regulatory functions -- even though these auditing jobs can be captured in one class because they require a similar education and experience background and utilize the same knowledge, skills, and abilities. Consequently, over the years this classification system, which is to categorize like jobs, has become a "job description" system.

CURRENT PAY SYSTEM

The State of Florida utilizes multiple pay plans. Three of these plans -- the Senior Management Service, the Selected Exempt Service and the Career Service -- are subject to the classification and pay provisions contained within the Service First legislation. The Department of Management Services is responsible for developing and maintaining each pay plan and for promulgating associated administrative rules.

Each of these pay plans contain pay grades that range from a minimum to a maximum amount. Some Career Service pay grades have pay steps (intervals) that ascend from the minimum to the maximum. The Career Service pay plan consists of about 246 pay grades, with pay minimum-to-maximum spreads varying from 40 percent to 250 percent. The Selected Exempt Service pay plan has 194 pay grades with minimum-to-maximum spreads ranging from about 45 percent to 250 percent. The Senior Management Service pay plan has six pay grades with minimum-to-maximum spreads of 100 percent to 200 percent. The Executive Office of the Governor uses another 29 pay grades with spreads of 46 percent to 73 percent.

Agencies have the day-to-day authority to assign pay to new hires as well as determine future pay increases. New hires into Career Service are usually paid at or just above the minimum of the pay grade. Future pay increases<sup>1</sup> for Career Service employees are in the form of either a permanent “base rate” of pay increase (e.g., promotion) or as a pay additive for specific reasons (e.g., temporary special duty). Specific reasons for pay increases are defined in DMS rules. Below are the categorical reasons justifying increases to base rate of pay (an employee may only receive one increase per category below within a 12-month period.):

- Superior proficiency – based on documented sustained superior performance
- Added duties and responsibilities – does not warrant a reclassification
- Education and training – satisfactory completion of a job-related class or program that benefits the agency
- Reassignment – may require reclassification, based on recruitment difficulties and must be under 50 miles
- Transfer – based on recruitment difficulties and must be over 50 miles
- Competitive job offer – to counter a documented bonafide job offer
- Internal pay relationships – an increase for current employees to provide pay equity if a new employee is hired at a higher starting salary than current employees in the same class

Pay additives are not permanent increases to an employee’s base rate of pay, and can be adjusted or removed based on the circumstances. Pay additives can be approved per position by the agency, with the exception of temporary special duty pay, which needs approval from DMS and the Governor’s Office of Policy and Budget if beyond 90 days. Below is a list of pay additives:

- Competitive area differential – CADs are approved at the class level in a certain geographical area, based on documented recruitment, turnover or competitive pay problems
- Shift differential – approved at the class level
- On-call – determined by the agency

---

<sup>1</sup> This excludes any pay increase approved by the Legislature, such as an annual across-the-board pay increase.

- Leadworker – does not warrant a reclassification
- Coordinator - does not warrant a reclassification
- Temporary special duty – for performing work not customarily assigned
- Trainer – for providing on-the-job training, this is work not customarily assigned
- Hazardous duty – for performing duties that are exceptionally hazardous or dangerous

Pay decreases can be made by way of a demotion, a disciplinary action, or voluntarily in lieu of potential workforce reduction in personnel.

Unlike Career Service employees, Selected Exempt Service and Senior Management Service employees may only receive pay increases to base rate of pay. Discretionary base rate of pay changes can be made by the employing agency based on performance or as otherwise deemed appropriate. The agencies are to inform DMS of all Selected Exempt Service and Senior Management Service pay changes.

Problems with Current Pay System

In addition to the shortcomings discussed earlier, the following are some basic problems that can be identified with the current pay system:

- The existing system is antiquated, built for the needs of the workforce almost 40 years ago.
- The system lacks any effective pay for performance mechanisms.
- The system allows for inconsistent application of pay assignments for similar work. For example, depending on the agency employees with the title of Public Information Officer may be paid under one of three different pay plans, with varying entry-level salaries.
- Reward systems are too closely associated with reclassifications or promotions, rather than movement through a pay range based on job performance or agency need.
- Career development incentives are limited. Employees are not encouraged and rewarded for learning new skills within their present job assignments. This lack of managerial flexibility to train, motivate, and reward employees has led to “class hopping”. Class hopping occurs when employees are retained and rewarded by manipulating the classification system for pay relief. This practice may temporarily benefit the employee but is neither beneficial to the State nor to the long-term career of the employee.

PROJECT RESEARCH ACTIVITIES

The Department of Management Services began the research into this project by bringing together a number of resources to help develop the proposed classification and pay program. A workgroup consisting of selected agency management, Governor's Office employees, and Legislative staff was formed to provide overall project policy guidance. Personnel officers from all affected agencies were assembled in a series of workshops to provide technical input and feedback. Survey information on classification and pay practices was collected from other states and entities utilizing broadband personnel systems. DMS also examined in detail the federal model classification system, and based the structure of the proposed broadbanding system on this model.

Service First Implementation Team

To assist DMS in the development of the proposed classification and pay system, a workgroup was formed from subject matter experts from the:

- Department of Transportation
- Department of Labor and Employment Security
- Department of Veterans' Affairs
- House and Senate
- Governor's Office of Policy and Budget

The workgroup met several times between July 2001 and October 2001. DMS staff attended the workgroup meetings to discuss components of the broadband design, and to offer suggestions on classification and pay policy. Agency personnel officers from the Florida Departments of Law Enforcement, Environmental Protection, Children and Families, Agriculture and Consumer Services, and Community Affairs, as well as the Agency for Workforce Innovation, were also invited to workgroup meetings and attended on several occasions to provide additional input on the technical details of the proposed broadbanding design, as well as its application to their agencies.

Broadband Survey

Five organizations that currently use a broadband classification and pay system were interviewed for the purpose of gathering information on different system design types, applications, benefits, and challenges. Organizations contacted were: State of Virginia, State of South Carolina, Tufts University, City of Tallahassee, and Florida's Department of Transportation (DOT). Questions asked about their systems covered the following:

- Date of implementation
- Reason for implementation
- The employee groups to which broadbanding was and was not applied
- Design structure of the broadbands
- Movement within/between broadbands
- Pay change mechanisms, e.g., promotion, pay additives
- Successes
- Challenges
- Suggestions

All survey participants were relatively new users of broadband systems. Their reasons for implementing such a system parallels those applying to the State of Florida: a cumbersome classification system and inflexible pay system, equating to an ineffective personnel management approach requiring excessive administration.

The survey participants reported that transitioning to broadbanding has reduced the number of position classes and pay grades by at least 60 percent and as much as 95 percent. South Carolina implemented the greatest change by consolidating about 2,500 job classes to just under 500 and 50 pay grades to 10. Pay bands were increased in width by each of the surveyed entities, with established pay band ranges from 80 percent to 130 percent. Pay band intervals, or the differences between pay band minimums, varied from 10 percent to 40 percent.

The organizations interviewed reported similarities in the methods that employees can progress through pay bands. Four of the five entities allow for “in-band” salary adjustments, equivalent to the State of Florida’s base rate of pay increases. Reasons for in-band adjustments included greater duties and responsibilities, certification attainment, internal salary inequities, new skills, and retention needs. Like Florida, Virginia offers a cost-of-living differential based on geographic location of the job. Virginia also provides for agency-specific “competitive differentials” for selected positions, based on local job market competitiveness. All five organizations provide the opportunity to award bonuses and pay for performance. They also utilize promotions and demotions between and within the bands.

When the survey participants were asked what challenges they faced and for advice on broadbanding implementation, their comments were similar:

- Build a system that is easy to administer
- Provide sufficient and continuous education to employees and managers
- Ensure management accountability for pay decisions
- Allow time for the cultural change to occur among employees. Remember that although flexible pay adjustments are possible, sufficient funding must be available
- Do not leave vestiges of the old system in place

Pay Survey

In addition to information collected on how broadbanding has been designed and implemented, DMS also researched the pay practices of other organizations. Therefore, in addition to the five entities surveyed on broadbanding, several other organizations were contacted. DMS received pay information from four additional state governments and four private sector companies. The surveyed organizations were:

- SunTrust Banks, Inc.
- Tropicana Products, Inc.
- Uniroyal Technology Corporation
- Watkins Motor Lines, Inc.
- State of Pennsylvania
- State of California
- State of Georgia
- State of Texas

All of the entities contacted provide base pay increases due to merit, across-the-board pay increases, or both. Five provide for pay increases based on performance only (Texas, Georgia, Virginia, Watkins Motor Lines, and Tropicana). Uniroyal Technology is the only private sector firm that offers an across-the-board pay increase in addition to merit pay. The amount of merit and across-the-board pay increases are determined annually. States surveyed are appropriated a percentage amount for pay increases, while the private sector firms distribute a percentage to be used for merit and/or other pay adjustments. Some of the organizations provided the following additional information:

- Like the State of Florida, four of the surveyed organizations (Watkins Motor Lines, SunTrust Banks, and the states of Pennsylvania and Texas) give a lump sum bonus in lieu of an increase to the base rate of pay if the employee is currently at the maximum of the pay range.
- Watkins Motor Lines reduces the pay increase percentage the higher the employee is in the pay range.
- SunTrust Banks in some cases provides for “extended salary reviews,” where pay increases are not given annually, but are based on 15 to 18 month pay cycles. This approach is utilized when an employee’s salary is high in a pay range, yet performance has been modest. This company also uses “accelerated salary reviews” when the employee’s performance is high, yet his/her pay as compared to the market average is substantially deficient.
- South Carolina does not require annual pay increases to be linked to performance appraisals; however, any pay reductions must be tied to the appraisal.

Performance bonuses are also funded by all of the surveyed organizations. Most are distributed annually; however, Watkins Motor Lines also provides for quarterly bonuses. One company (SunTrust Banks) grants, “spot bonuses” for unique, one-time performance contributions. California has a special plan whereby up to six percent of the supervisors within a department can receive a $250 to $750 bonus, depending on the number awarded. Pennsylvania allows managers to give other managers up to a $1,500 bonus per year.

Finally, other than merit pay increases, across-the-board pay increases, and bonus pay, organizations contacted also offer base pay increases at any time of the year for reasons such as recognition of assuming added duties and responsibilities, high job performance, internal inequity adjustments, educational/training attainment, and competitive job offers. Texas was the only organization to offer a pay increase that recognizes longevity for service of more than five years with the state. California offers the most unique pay increases – flight pay, bilingual pay, and avalanche control pay.

Use of the Federal Standard Occupational Classification

DMS designed the broadbanding structure proposed in this report using the Federal Standard Occupational Classification System as a foundation. Formerly known as the Dictionary of Occupational Titles, the Standard Occupational Classification is a grouping and numbering system that describes the various types of work performed in the public and private sectors. Surveying employers in both the public and private sectors to determine the work elements associated with working titles, the U.S. Department of Labor has constructed an extensive occupational database. This data is also used to link occupations within occupational groups, and provides a system that serves as a common language, cataloging most jobs that are performed in the United States. The Standard Occupational Classification System has been used for:

- The 2000 US Census

- Federal Bureau of Labor Statistics Product Development
- Conducting Pay Surveys
- Assisting Managers in Building Class Specifications and Job Descriptions
- Determining Hiring Guidelines (typical education and experience)

Input from Personnel Officers

From the beginning of this project, input from the State's agency personnel officers was essential to the creation and modification of the proposed broadband system design. As both experts and customers, the personnel officers' involvement was sought to ensure the proposed system could be transitioned to with a minimum of difficulty, and would also be successfully implemented on a long-term basis. Although DMS has the policy expertise in this area, agency personnel staff have the practical experience of using the current classification and pay system. Personnel officers also know first-hand the types of work employees perform, the classes they are in, and the pay they receive. To start, DMS asked the personnel officers for feedback on the general structure of the initial broadband system design. Once the basic broadbanding classification system framework was established, agency personnel staff then participated in 13 workshops involving almost 30 hours of intense review of what employees do and where they should be placed within the new broadband classification system. The goal of these workshops, consisting of several "group hall" sessions, and additional one-on-one meetings concerning agency-specific classes, was to reach a level of consensus between DMS and the agencies on the final crosswalk between current job classes to the proposed broadband system.

PROPOSED CLASSIFICATION SYSTEM

The proposed design of the broadband classification system modernizes our outdated system. The voluminous number of narrowly defined classes of employment with fragmented relationships have been broadened and realigned, so that the existing 3,343 classes have been consolidated into 145. To accomplish this, DMS used a uniform job categorization system made up of broadly defined job families divided further into occupational groups and occupations based on the Federal Standard Occupation Classification System (SOC). A crosswalk between existing classes to the proposed broadband levels is shown in Appendix B. The number of positions combined into a level ranges from one to more than 11,000. Appendix C lists and explains those instances where an occupational group contains levels/classes populated by less than 10 positions. In summary, the proposed broadband classification system consists of:

- 22 job families – Job families are groupings of similar occupational groups. One example of a job family is “Legal”. Within the job family of Legal are two occupational groups.
- 38 occupation groups –Occupational groups are similar occupations grouped together. One example is within the Legal job family are two occupational groups: “Lawyers and Judges” and “Legal Support.”
- 231 occupations - Within the Legal Support occupation group, the occupations are court reporters, law clerks, and paralegal/legal assistants.
- Sub-occupation – Sub-occupations are specific jobs within occupations. This division enables personnel staff and employees to more readily recognize why a group of employees was placed in a particular occupation. Within the court reporter occupation group, the sub-occupation are court reporters and hearing reporters.
- 145 occupational broadband levels – each occupation group has up to 6 performance levels. Employees within the Legal Support occupation, for example, are divided among 3 levels based on job performance indicators. (Levels are also associated with pay bands that are addressed in Appendix B of this report.)

The Federal SOC System provided DMS with a proven job classification mechanism. Use of the SOC also supported the process of determining related pay levels, as well as standardizing the job characteristics of positions allocated to given job families and occupation groups. Underlying this system is the SOC coding structure that DMS will use for reporting and costing purposes. Of the job families listed in the SOC System, DMS used all but one (Military). Below is a chart depicting the 22 job families and their accompanying 38 occupation groups. Appendix D identifies modifications to the SOC that were made to capture needs specific to Florida.

The broadband levels (up to six per Occupation Group) were based on job performance indicators. This provided the means to assign a job's worth, or pay. The higher the level number, the higher the minimum pay of the assigned pay band. Performance factors, long established compensable guidelines used to determine the overall value of work, were used to delineate which classes of employees belonged to which level. The factors utilized were developed with the input of the agency personnel officers, who are responsible for classifying and determining pay for employees within their agencies. The following factors were used to distinguish different levels of work within each occupation group:

- Knowledge: measures the technical knowledge required to meet performance standards at a particular level
- Skill: defines how much preparation and learning through experience and training is necessary to perform at a particular level
- Complexity: measures the degree of difficulty and the general complexity involved in performing work at a particular level
- Decision-Making: defines the degree of decision-making authority given to a class at a particular level
- Autonomy: defines the level of independence assigned to a class at a particular level
- Consequence of Error: measures the opportunity for and effect of errors committed in a level at a particular level
- Communication: measures the effective handling of personal contacts as well as the importance of the contacts themselves at a particular level
- Planning: measures the ability to identify goals, define obstacles, select, and develop the best course of action to accomplish an objective

- Supervisory Responsibility: measures the assigned span of control and the organization and leadership required in the guidance of others (at a particular level)

Appendix E lists the primary factors chosen by the personnel officers to determine levels for each occupational group.

Should the proposed broadbanding classification system be adopted, the practice of having pre-defined, class-based written minimum qualifications; knowledge, skills, and abilities; and examples of work will no longer exist. The classification to a job family, occupational group, and occupation will address these factors as well as the performance factors. Other attributes currently assigned to a class will transition to being position-specific. The Fair Labor Standards Act code (FLSA) is one such example. Each of the existing classes is assigned an FLSA for the purposes of determining whether the employees within the class are eligible for overtime payments. Broadbanding will require this indicator to be position-specific. This solves a recurring problem where DMS is provided with many classification level exceptions, since currently not all positions in a class are designated with the same FLSA status. The retirement code will also have to be assigned per position, rather than class. For example, under the new classification design, Senior Management Service classes have been combined with Selected Exempt Service classes. However, different retirement benefits given to SMS and SES employees will need to be delineated by position.

Adoption of a new broadband classification system will also require several reviews to examine old, outdated assignments of other class-based indicators -- these include existing class-based assignments of the Equal Employment Opportunity code and collective bargaining representation.

With only 145 broadband classes as compared to more than 3,300 under the current classification system, the State of Florida can expect to reap the benefits of a modern personnel management system, as was discussed in the "Why Broadbanding?" section of this report. To further illustrate, under a pilot project the Florida Department of Transportation (DOT) has used a broadbanding system since 1994. As a result of transitioning from the existing classification system to a broadbanding system, certain savings could be measured in the administration of human resource activities.

The DOT experience has shown a 70 percent reduction in the number of position reclassifications, and a nearly 60 percent reduction in the number of position adds/deletes. Under the old system, DOT estimated an average processing time of 50 minutes for each personnel action. Over the last five years, the average annual number of position reclassifications for all agencies statewide has been 3,442, requiring an average of 2,868 hours to process. By reducing the number of reclassification actions by 70 percent, overall processing time would be cut to 860 hours, saving the State of Florida 2,008 administrative hours per year on reclassification actions. When adding the time savings derived from a reduction in the number of add/deletes, promotions, demotions, and reassignments overall administrative productivity would become substantially greater. Also, the administrative savings described here do not include the time and effort expended under the current system by managers, administrative workers, and affected employees in preparing position descriptions, personnel action forms, and other supporting documentation for submission to the personnel office. Time savings on these related personnel activities would be even greater than the direct time savings associated with processing personnel actions. Though time is saved through the reduced number of reclassifications, there is a small degree of offset incurred by the increased emphasis on pay administration due to the increased number and types of employee pay actions provided for under the broadbanding system.

Other benefits of the proposed broadbanding classification system include:

- The number of reclassification actions will decline significantly.
- The broad-based classes will allow for flexibility in organizational structure and reduce the number of supervisory classes.
- Minimum qualifications will become the knowledge, skills, and abilities essential to individual positions. One exception to this will be any statutory requirements at the occupational group or class level. Such requirements will continue to be a minimum qualification in addition to position specific factors.
- Emphasis will be placed on pay administration and job performance evaluation by management, rather than using the classification system to award salary increases.
- Employees may demonstrate and be rewarded for their contribution to the agency without being burdened by the constraints of narrowly defined job classifications.
- Day to day personnel administration will be less demanding on the state's limited resources.

PROPOSED PAY SYSTEM

As discussed earlier, the current pay systems under review consist of 475 individual pay ranges, with the minimum-to-maximum spreads varying from a low of 40 percent to a high of 250 percent. It has been pointed out that along with the current classification system, the Florida's present pay system is fragmented, lacks consistency, and is designed to reward employees for seniority and vertical job changing rather than performance and lateral job/skill development. However, the simplified and modernized design of the proposed broadbanding classification system has allowed for the development of two proposed options for a single broadbanding pay system that would replace the pay systems mentioned above. The new pay system uses different terminology by replacing "pay range" with "pay band." The proposed options are:

- Using a unique cost-neutral pay band for each of the 145 proposed broadband levels (levels being equivalent to classes).
- Using a set of 25 pay bands with standardized band intervals and spreads, applied to the proposed broadband levels based on best fit to current salary data.

Implementing either of these options would result in a substantially reduced number of pay ranges, greater consistency among pay band spreads, rational pay progression between class levels in the occupational groups, and in many cases a widening of pay ranges to allow for long-term recognition of in-job development and performance.

Development of the proposed pay system options began with a "status quo" analysis of existing pay data for each of the 145 newly created broadband levels. As a result of consolidating several thousand classes and pay ranges into 145 broadband levels, almost every level consisted of multiple pay ranges. Because one of the benefits of broadbanding is to have fewer but wider pay ranges, two distinct groups of cost neutral "starting point" pay ranges were created using existing minimum and maximum salaries and applied to the broadband levels. These pay ranges are displayed in Appendix F and G, and were defined by:

- Existing pay range data – The lowest minimum salary and highest maximum salary of all the pay ranges consolidated into a broadband level were used to create the pay range for that broadband level.
- Actual salary data – The lowest actual minimum salary and actual highest maximum actual salary of all employees grouped into one broadband level were used to create the pay range for that broadband level. (Note: The current pay ranges and the actual salary figures include the pay increase implemented in November 2001.)

Creating these pay ranges pointed out noticeable differences between the broadband pay ranges and actual salaries being earned. In some cases, the lowest pay range minimum salary could be, for example, $25,000 for a broadband level, while the actual lowest salary being paid to an employee within that level may be $30,000. The highest pay range maximum may be $80,000, yet the actual highest salary being paid is $45,000. Pay range widths were also reviewed to help determine the range of an occupation's job worth, that is, the range of salary that is commensurate with the work. Examinations like these helped develop pay bands that are more reflective of our workforce and with broadbanding concepts discussed earlier.

It should be noted that market salary data was also reviewed. In 2000, the Department conducted two salary surveys – one of Career Service classes and one of executive classes. The surveys provided a number of benchmark average hire salaries. Although informative, less than half the broadband levels included a class that was benchmarked in the survey. Because the surveys were not conducted with broadbanding in mind, the benchmark classes selected for the surveys do not provide a good fit for the new broadband levels. Because of this, it was decided not to base new pay bands on the results of this salary data. However, use of the federal Standard Occupation Codes should afford the state with better more accurate market data for future refinement of the proposed pay bands.

The following paragraphs outline the two options presented in this report for utilizing a pay system complimentary to the broadband levels. The first pay system presented is cost neutral to implement (Appendix F), with each broadband level having a customized pay band. The second pay system (Appendix G), although somewhat costly to implement, affords more benefits to the State. This alternative pay system has only 25 pay bands assigned to the 145 broadband levels.

The Cost-Neutral Pay Band Option

For the proposed cost-neutral pay system, a single pay range was created and assigned to each broadband level within an occupation group, resulting in 145 pay bands. In trying to achieve broad but consistent pay range widths and guided by the survey information received from the other broadbanding entities, the following parameters were established:

1. A minimum pay bandwidth of 75 percent.
2. A maximum pay bandwidth of 125 percent for the levels contained within all occupation groups except Manager and Executive.
3. A maximum pay bandwidth of 300 percent for the levels contained within the Manager and Executive occupation groups.
4. Progressive pay bands within an occupational group – no cases in which the minimum of a pay band assigned to a given level is less than the pay band minimum(s) for the preceding levels.

Under this option, pay bands were created so that the minimum pay established for any given level did not exceed the minimum pay range and/or actual salary for that level. In most cases, either the minimum for the current pay range or the minimum actual salary was used as the minimum of a level's pay band; the determining factor of which figure was used was essentially based on the current pay range width.

If the current pay range width for a level was less than 75 percent and therefore under the established criteria needed to be broadened, then a pay band of 75 percent was established, usually with the current pay range minimum as the starting point. Conversely, if the current pay range width for a level was more than 125 percent and therefore under the established criteria needed to be narrowed, then a pay band of 125 percent was established, usually with the actual salary minimum as the starting point. Levels with a current pay range width between 75 and 125 percent remained in tact, given modest adjustments to the minimum of the pay band. Exceptions to this methodology for establishing pay bands were based on the progressive pay principle – if establishing a pay band for a given level using the standard criteria would have resulted in a non-linear progression to the pay bands for that occupation group, then an alternate pay band was created for that level that “fit” into the progression. Finally, for the levels within the Executive and Manager occupation groups the pay bands established were assigned with a width of 300 percent to account for these occupations having the greatest disparity between minimum and maximum salaries.

In terms of the broadbanding pay system benefits outlined earlier in this section, the cost neutral approach would provide the following:

- Reduces the number of pay ranges from 475 to 145, a 69 percent decline.
- Provides greater consistency among pay band spreads; no non-managerial pay band width is less than 75 percent or greater than 125 percent.
- Provides a linear and rational pay progression from level to level within each occupation group.
- In many cases the pay ranges for levels are broadened, thus allowing for greater employee movement within a broadband. Even in those cases where the pay band established did not exceed the current pay range, it is likely that within the level there are at least some classes under the existing system with pay ranges less than that established for the level.

Although the title of this approach is “cost neutral,” a cost of less than $15,000 would be required, if the integrity of the broadbands is retained as well as the properties that define the proposed pay bands. The cost is associated with one broadband level, that of Level 3 assigned to the Health Diagnosis and Treatment occupation. Due to ensuring a linear progression from one level to the next highest level, and that the classes of positions assigned to the level are accurate, the pay band minimum is higher than the actual salary earned by twelve positions. The twelve positions are in the classes of both Dietician Supervisor and Public Health Nutritionist Supervisor. This cost should be able to be readily absorbed by the employing agencies.

In addition, where the pay range minimum was greater than the lowest actual salary being paid, the pay range minimum became the minimum of the proposed pay band. A review of the positions paid below the pay range showed that these positions are in a training or temporary status, whereby their salaries are lower due to agency-specific reasons. The proposed pay bands hold employees harmless of these situations by not lowering the minimum of the new pay band.

Finally, if a drawback to this proposed pay system exists, it is the fact that it is not truly a “system;” rather, it is a collection of individual pay ranges created with a level of attention given to overall symmetry. While certainly functional, the fact that each pay band is essentially tied to a broadband level means that over time it will be more difficult to maintain the integrity of the initial symmetry. Changes may begin to be made to the pay bands perhaps without regard to the relationship with other levels in an occupation group, or to the “system” as a whole.

The 25 Pay Band Option

Under this option, a set of 25 pay bands were created and assigned across the 145 pay band levels. This option provides greater reform in that greater economies of standardization and efficiency are realized due to fewer pay bands and more consistency in pay band widths and intervals. Furthermore, the approach taken was to create a set of pay bands that best represent actual salaries paid, yet that provide the least cost to implement. To accomplish this, the following parameters were set:

1. Create a standard set of pay bands, totaling fewer than the actual number of broadband levels.
2. Establish a standardized width of 125 percent between the minimum and maximum of each pay band, with the exception of 300 percent widths for the occupation groups of Manager and Executive.

3. Ensure a consistent interval between the minimum salaries for each pay band of 9 percent, with the exception of 25 percent for the Manager occupation and 20 percent for the Executive occupation. (Variations were due to selecting “best fit” pay bands that reflect actual salaries.)
4. Ensure pay bands reflect the range of actual salaries paid while being mindful of implementing the least expensive pay bands.
5. Allow for progressive pay bands within an occupational group – no cases in which the minimum of a pay band assigned to a given level is less than the pay band minimum(s) for the preceding levels.

A program was written to help run “what-if” scenarios to identify the least expensive set of 25 pay bands, while capturing the majority of actual salaries paid. After extensive runs, the proposed pay bands in Appendix G were created. Excluding vacant positions, just over 900 employees would be under the minimum of the proposed pay band assigned to their broadband levels. About 500 positions currently vacant have pay range minimums lower than the proposed pay bands as well. If the 25 pay bands were applied to the broadband levels today, the cost to bring actual salaries up to the new minimums would be $465,000. The cost to bring vacancies up to the new minimums would be $1,128,000.

Changes to Pay Progression

By statute, “the pay administration system must contain provisions to allow managers the flexibility to move employees through the pay ranges and provide for salary increase additives and lump-sum bonuses.” To meet this requirement, the Department of Management Services recently revised Career Service rules to remove existing obstacles to providing a better environment for pay progression.

SUMMARY OF CURRENT CAREER SERVICE RULES	RECOMMENDED CHANGES
New or promotional appointments are to receive a salary at the minimum of the pay range for that position. Few exceptions are allowed.	Remove restriction that limits initial salary to the minimum of the pay range.
Base rate of pay increases can be given under one of these categories: superior proficiency; added duties and responsibilities; education and training; reassignment, transfer; competitive job offer; and internal pay relationships.	Remove pre-defined reasons. Ensure documented justification is maintained for pay increases, funds are available for the increase, and that the increase is not specifically prohibited by law.
Employees may receive only one increase per category in any 12-month period.	Remove the restriction of receiving only one pay increase per category.
Shift differential pay additive is class-based.	Remove the restriction of being class-based to being position-based.

The above recommendations are specific to Career Service employees only. Agency heads already have the discretion to adjust the salaries of their Selected Exempt Service and Senior Management Service employees.

CONCLUSION

Governor Bush's Service First initiative emphasizes a set of guiding principles for enhancing the state's civil service system. Changes are needed to modernize the current system so that managers have the opportunity to reward employees for performance. This proposed broadbanding classification and compensation model will:

- Achieve efficiency and savings as a result of reductions in administrative workload
- Simplify personnel administration
- Utilize best practices in HR administration
- Allow managers to utilize employees to their full potential and with more latitude to reward high performance
- And, facilitate the creation of a workforce that can readily respond to a changing environment and the needs of the citizens that we serve

The proposed system will be built using the Federal Standard Occupational Classification (SOC) system as a structural foundation. This will provide a consistent approach in how we define occupations and categorize jobs. This is beneficial in many ways, including enhancing the state's ability to plan and address the needs of a dynamic workforce and be more responsive to fulfilling critical agency missions. Further, the gains that will be made in employee productivity, and ultimately in agency performance, may be achieved through broadbanding with minimal costs.

Appendix C

BROADBAND CLASSES WITH LESS THAN TEN POSITIONS

The purpose for this appendix is to offer a brief explanation for proposing classifications even though very few positions are assigned to the level.

Mathematics Level Four – The current class titled Senior Actuarial Analyst is the only class that will make up the new level. The work performed by this class is at a significantly higher level than that of the classes assigned to level three, to the extent that consolidating levels was not justifiable. Level five however, is comprised of three high-level, Selected Exempt Service classifications with an even wider variance in responsibilities.

Legal Support Levels Two and Three – Level two comprises court reporters and level three comprises legal clerks. There are a small number of positions in both, yet the duties and level of responsibility are significantly different.

Artists and Designers Levels One, Two, and Four – These levels are comprised of low-count FTE classes that are highly specialized and therefore not available for consolidation into one or two levels.

Media and Communications Level Three – This level comprises the current classification Editorial Supervisor – SES. This class is separated due to an increased responsibility level as confirmed with the user agency. The position in this class is responsible for a large monthly publication.

Police Level Two – This level is comprised of the classes of Law Enforcement Airplane Pilot I and Law Enforcement Corporal. Very few positions are allocated to the pilot class and most agencies that previously used the corporal class now use Law Enforcement Investigator classes.

Security Guards Level Four – This level is reserved for the Mental Health Security Chief – SES. This position serves in the mental health institutions and performs at a significantly higher level than classes assigned to level three.

Food Preparation and Serving Level Two – This level is comprised of the class of Restaurant Executive Chef – SES, a highly unique and specialized class.

Sales and Sales Related Level Two – This level is comprised of five classifications with only a total of seven positions. The level is justified in terms of duties and responsibilities.

Appendix D

EXCEPTIONS TO THE STANDARD OCCUPATIONAL CLASSIFICATION

The Standard Occupational Classification (SOC) is grouped, titled and coded in such a way that Florida could develop a series of classes for every occupational group, occupation or sub-occupation. Depending on the methodology chosen, the total number of classifications yielded would vary significantly.

Florida has chosen to build a broadband classification system using the SOC as a guide. For each job family, occupational groups that are unique enough in terms of pay differences, background requirements and/or types of duties have been included in the model. For each of the chosen occupational groups, a series of classes was developed.

The following are exceptions/modifications to the SOC that were made to make the system fit Florida:

SOC Job Family	SOC Occupational Group	Florida Exceptions/Modifications
Management		Executive was added to family title. The group was split into two separate occupational groups: Manager and Executive
Business and Financial Operations		Job Family title changed to Business and Finance. This group was split into two occupational groups: Business Operations and Finance
Computer and Mathematical		Job Family title changed to Computer and Mathematics
